

Station Identification

AT&T respectfully requests exemption from the provisions of Section 5.115, Station Identification. This is required because the periodic identification requirement could interfere with objectives of the testing, particularly where long intervals of uninterrupted transmission are required, for example in bit error rate testing and slow-fading propagation testing. In addition, the broadband commercial equipment has no provision for station identification.