

The overall goal of the INCA mission, is to detect the density of solar neutrons, to fill a gap in our current space environment data. The on board neutron detector will differentiate between neutrons and other charged particles which pass through the instrument.

The radio communications links are necessary to support control of the experiment, and to communicate the experiment data back to the University.