The Rockwell Collins contract includes the design and development of an alert pager/klaxon system for use by Air Force air crews. The system will provide a ground element of the system that will receive, validate, and disseminate EAMs and perform alerting functions to initiate aircrew action. The integrated system, of which RDGI is designing the paging portion, will perform both fixed and deployed strategic and non-strategic nuclear execution forces' missions.

RDGI will be operating the transmitting equipment for limited localized test transmissions, generally less than one minute in length but no longer than 15 minutes in length in unusual circumstances. The purpose is to transmit test pages to test the RDGI one-way pagers.
