

Description of Experiment

During the development and manufacture of its radio system, Thales conducts verification and validation testing to assure that the radio design and implementation meets all operational and performance requirements. These tests include voice and data transmission (and reception) on all required radio frequencies at various transmit distances and across a variety of terrains. Follow-up testing is also performed as required whenever design changes occur, or in the event of any significant system component changes.