Product: Panasonic Notebook Computer Model CF-18mk3 Family
With Two Internal Transmitters

This is in response to the above mentioned correspondence dated July 14, 2005.

Recently we have been receiving various administrative comments from FCC regarding our request for confidentiality for various filed exhibits of the subject product, and other CF-18mk3 family combinations, with installed individual transmitters.

As a matter of record, the legal applicant and grantee for the subject FCC ID is Panasonic Corporation of North America ("PNA"); and the filed FCC Form 731 correctly declares PNA as the legal party to sign all related legal documents. Our end-product employs individual transmitter modules, which were separately certified under their own unique FCC ID's by Intel and Siemens for mobile operation. These exact same transmitters are now installed within our end-product under our own unique FCC ID for portable operation.

To prevent any further delays and/or confusion regarding exactly which filed exhibits should be treated as confidential, PNA requests the following filed exhibits be treated as confidential:

Intel provided WLAN Block Diagrams, Schematic Diagrams, Description of Operation and Parts List. This transmitter is not user-adjustable and is not provided with tune-up information.

Siemens provided EGPRS Block Diagrams, Schematic Diagrams, Description of Operation, Tune-up Procedure and Parts List.

In accordance with provisions of Section 0.457(d) of the Commission's Rules and Section 552(b)(4) of the Freedom of Information Act, PNA request confidentiality for all of the above declared exhibits, which contain proprietary, confidential and trade secrets material, which would not be routinely made available for public inspection.

This now answers all known comments. Thank you for your attention in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

Richard Mullen
