Mr. Genachowski,

If Lightsquared is ultimately successful and the entire GPS industry & GPS users are forced to spend billions for uncertain fixes, one must then ask the question:

Now that the precedent is set, what is to stop another politically backed broadband entrepreneur from repeating the same situation for the implementation of 5G? I'm sure they'll offer some fix provided by their colleagues that the rest of the industry will be forced to pay for.

If outside interests are allowed to continue to threaten GPS, then the future viability of the industry is at risk.

Thank you,

Ernesto Meruelo
